

New Canadian Nonprofit Targets Health Resources Gap in Poor Nations

By Ivy Mungcal on 04 May 2010

Canada has established a new organization to tackle the shortage of health resources in developing countries.

Grand Challenges Canada is a USD221 million project that brings together top Canadian scientists, researchers and private sector actors to develop innovative ways to address health problems faced by poor countries.

The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation is supporting the nonprofit organization, Toronto Sun reports.

Ivy Mungcal

Ivy spearheads the Devex Newswire, the most comprehensive daily compilation of international development news from around the globe. As our lead blogger, Ivy also manages and contributes to "Think Development," our blog covering top think tanks worldwide, as well as several other Devex publications. Ivy joined Devex in September 2009.